freedom of expression attorneys Cathy Gellis and Jeremy Malcolm.

The advisory council of Prostagia also lacked expertise in child protection. The council consisted of convicted sex offender Guy Hamilton-Smith, sex worker Maggie McNeill, and webcam model Honey Sampson, as well as a number of individuals who have expertise in free expression, intellectual property protections, and Internet governance. In addition, clinical psychologist Dr James Cantor serves on Prostagia's advisory council. This is notable because Dr Cantor has expressed views that White as a research associate in 2012 to serve as a "liaison between Prostagia and its stakeholder communities" in its convenings with "marginalized stakeholder groups." Sarah Phillimore, a family lawyer in the United Kingdom, discovered that White had been arrested in 2012 for criminal sex conduct with a victim under the age of 13. Following scrutiny on social media, Prostagia terminated White and has now implemented a staff screening policy. Phillimore says that Prostagia's executive

"Merry Christmas to everyone, including the nepiophiles, pedophiles, hebephiles and ephobophiles who have to put up with people ... virtue-signalling and perpetuating stigma every single day of the year." She had joined Prostagia in August 2019. Months before joining Prostagia she self-published a book Past the Dark Field, which she described in a podcast as being "a collection of short stories about minor-attracted people." She says in the podcast she was volunteers? Executive director Jeremy Malcolm replied in the affirmative, saying, "We don't make a policy of asking people about their sexuality before they are allowed to volunteer." Dr Malcolm's language, in equating pedophilia with recognized sexual orientations, normalizes child sexual abuse under the guise of open-minded compassion.

Prostagia does not disclose all of its staff, volunteers, or donors on its website, though it notes in its annual report that these records are available for public inspection by
